You can get it here: www.nin.com

I'm at work, so I can't exactly check it out at the moment.

I thought "Discipline" and "Echoplex" sucked.....

I haven't listened to the whole thing yet but...I think it sounds like a half assed album. It's only 49 minutes long and a few of the tracks are instrumentals, which we already got a shit ton of on Ghosts I-IV. The artwork is cool though and I like the message from trent.

(thank you for your continued and loyal support over the years - this one's on me)

Discipline is the highlight of the album...and it's mediocre at best. I still dig it though. Thanks trent.

I've only heard Discipline and some other one I forgot the name of.

Discipline is better than most of the stuff on Year Zero in my opinion, and the other song I couldn't hear well but it was pretty catchy.

I think the opposite. I thought Year Zero, from what I've listened to, was pretty decent. "Survivalism" & "Capital G" were pretty good in my opinion.

Oh I loved Year Zero.
I just liked Discipline better.

I thought it sounded like With Teeth 2, with a little Year Zero in there. But mostly With Teeth 2.

(I think With Teeth sucked)

I loved With Teeth, and after listening to The Slip it just made me want to listen to it again - so I did.

I like Discipline (sounds like it could have come from a With Teeth recording session), Echoplex & The Four of Us are Dying, which could have been on The Fragile.

I hope he puts more time into the next album though.

I've never really listened to Nine Inch Nails.

I guess this would be a good way to try them out, although according to you guys it's not very good.

well its definately not their best. Try Year Zero or Downward Spiral if you can get hold of them; they'd be quite good introductions. Im personally a bit dissapointed with the new album though...

As a person who doesn't know much by NIN, (until recently I only had The Downward Spiral, which I downloaded illegally :notapprove) I would reccomend it. I like it about as much as TDS, although I kind of like them more than each other (PARADOX!!) for different reasons, I like TDS because it takes aural misery to a new level, and I like The Slip, just... because...

Just cause. :D

I loved the Slip. I thought it was a good flowing relatively short album. I just like that it's really cohesive and when you listen to it all the way through it just works, it's much better all the way through as opposed to just listening to one or two songs by themselves. The best part about all this though, is that Trent Reznor is pioneering the way for a new distribution method for music. :billy should be taking notes.

What, 'cause it was free?

Billy's done that before... and in a more original way, by having the fans circulate it in their own methods, rather than hand-feeding it to us.

You ought to know what I'm talking about... :monocle

Not the best NIN album, but certainly still way better than allot of other bands. And as a Freebie definitely worth getting hold of :)

I'd say to anyone who hasnt heard NIN before to get a copy of the "Broken" EP its not as expensive as the full albums and gives a much better idea, than this download, of Trents greatness... ;)
