Wow, I just read up on this. I guess he just got back from Italy celebrating his son's graduation. Wow..58... really brings life into perspective enjoy every piece of it. You never know which second will be your last. I truly enjoyed hearing what he had to say, even if I may have differed on some views, I respect him.

that's a bummer. he seemed like a such a nice guy. this november isn't going to be the same without him and his dry erase board.

RIP. He was too young, man. This is a pity.

it's important to live in the moment rather than live for the future. I truly enjoyed hearing him as well heavenly
